8 REPLY BRIEF OF DEFENDANT-APPELLANT
9 ON THE MERITS

10 The prosecution has not returned the record of 11 testimony to the Clerk of this Court, however, notes already 12 taken of the record will suffice for this reply to the 13 State's briefs on the merits.

14 The State endeavors to distinguish between com-15 munications made to the jury during its actual deliberation 16 and those made to the jury between deliberation session but 17 while under supervision of the Officer placed in charge 18 until a verdict is returned.

19 The statute makes no such distinction. For 20 instance, Section 2945.33 provides in part as follows:

21 "When a cause is finally submitted * * * The 22 court may permit the jurors to separate during 23 the adjournment of court overnight, under 24 proper cautions, or under supervision of an 25 officer. Such officer shall not permit a communication to be made to them, * * * unless he does so by order of the court.* * *"
(Underscoring ours)

1 The oath provided for such an officer in charge
2 of a jury after the case is submitted to them is set out 3 in Section 2945.32, and in part is as follows:

4 " * * * You do solemnly swear * * * that you 5 will not suffer any communications to be 6 made to them, or any of them, orally or 7 otherwise; * * * except by the order of 8 this court, * * * ."

9 These mandatory provisions controlling the jury 10 and the conduct of the officers in charge take effect im-11 mediately when the case is submitted to the jury. Such 12 provisions are in full force, effect and controlling until 13 the jury returns its verdict or is discharged by the court.

14 State v. Adams, 141 Ohio St., 423, at page 430, 15 comments upon this situation in this language:

16 "The fact that in this case the communica-17 tion took place in the jury room rather 18 than outside as in the case of Emmert v.
19 State, supra, in the opinion of the court, 20 presents a distinction without a substantial 21 difference in legal effect or practical 22 results * * * ."

23 Under this ground of error -- misconduct of jurors 24 and the officials in charge of it -- it is established without 25 any contradiction that the members of the jury themselves violated the orders of the court. The officials in charge of the jury permitted members of the jury time after time to call over the telephone whomsoever they desired, make their own connections, and converse with the other parties

1 without the official in charge knowing what was said to the 2 juror. When defense endeavored to question the official 3 about what he may have learned, prosecution objected and 4 the court sustained the objection.

5 This was a flagrant violation of the provisions of 6 two sections of the statutes expressly enacted to prevent 7 exactly what occurred here, without let or hindrance. The 8 court was ignored by the officials. These violations of the 9 law by the officials in charge of the jury were committed 10 without once seeking the advice and order of the court even 11 though the officials had been expressly admonished by the 12 court and took an oath that there would be no communica-13 tions made to the jury without the knowledge and consent and 14 supervision of the court. Either these statutes mean what 15 they plainly say, and should be enforced or else they are 16 to be ignored, made nugatory, and vain. The errors com-17 mitted under this assignment of error were prejudicial as 18 has been held by this court in the Adams case and by courts 19 of last resort throughout the country. The rule established 20 and followed in Federal Courts is even more strict than that 21 in the State Courts. A violation of the statutes here must 22 be presumed to be prejudicial. If lower courts and 23 officials charged with a sacred duty are permitted to 24 violate statutes as in this instance, then the jury system 25

1 is shorn of its sacredness and its integrity. When such 2 flagrant violations of law occur then this Court should 3 reverse. It is only by a reversal that our trial courts 4 will have impressed upon them their duty to see to it that 5 officials instructed and appointed by them perform their 6 proper duty as required by law. This is a denial of due 7 process of law. It should be observed that this was an 8 extremely doubtful case. The jury was out five days and 9 nights. The case was blazed across the headlines every 10 day for months. Poisonous, vicious and false broadcasts 11 filled the air and were heard by jurors. It was the topic 12 of conversation at every place where more than one person 13 assembled. There can be no doubt that the persons talking 14 to the jurors mentioned the case. Upsetting conditions 15 at home may have well been brought to the attention of 16 the jurors which affected their attitude of mind.

17 We cannot emphasize or urge too strongly the 18 prejudicial error committed in the charge of the court to 19 the jury. We will again emphasize here the prejudicial 20 nature of the courts charge upon the reputation of the 21 defendant as to his general conduct and his propensities 22 toward peaceful and quiet living. The charge on that point 23 is found at pages 7006, 7007 of the record. The prejudice 24 is created in this language of the court in its charge
25

1 as follows:

2 "Some evidence has been given in this case 3 concerning the claimed general conduct and 4 reputation of the defendant and it is proper 5 to present such evidence for your considera-6 tion. It is not admitted because it furnishes proof of guilt or innocence, but because it is a matter of common knowledge that people of good character and reputation do not generally commit serious or major crimes. " * * * "

7 By this language the court emphatically charged 8 the jury that reputation or general conduct was not to be 9 considered or used in arriving at guilt or innocence. Such 10 language is in direct violation of every decision on the 11 subject. It is contrary to the statutes of Ohio made and 12 enacted for the control of trials. Section 2945.04, 13 Revised Code of Ohio, in the definition of reasonable doubt 14 states the following:

15 " * * * I * * * It is that state of the case 16 which, after the entire comparison and consideration of all the evidence, * * * I * * * "

17 The statute in unmistakable language requires that 18 the jury give full and fair consideration to all the evi-19 dence. By the charge of the court in this cause the jury 20 was not permitted to consider all of the evidence in arriv-21 ing at its verdict. Again, the defendant has been denied 22 due process of law. Here, sticking out like a sore thumb, 23 is a direct admonition by the court to the jury that it 24 shall not consider reputation as to general conduct in 25

1 arriving at its verdict of guilt or innocence.

2 In its brief on the merits the State again refers 3 to the T shirt. The emphasis given the jury about the T
4 shirt by the State made it one of the outstanding features 5 of the evidence. The State has taken three distinct and 6 separate positions on the matter of the T shirt. In the 7 trial the State claimed that the T shirt was covered with 8 blood and that therefore the defendant got rid of it some 9 way. That was its position before the Court of Appeals.
10 In the Appellant's brief on the motion for leave to appeal 11 it was pointed out that such a spray of blood going downward, 12 outward and upward would most assuredly have gotten on the 13 upper part of the trousers of the defendant, if he were the 14 killer, but there was not one vestige of blood on the upper 15 part of the trousers or belt of the defendant. In its 16 answer brief on the motion the State made its first shift 17 in its theory about the T shirt. At page 86 of its brief 18 on the motion the State said:

19 "It may well be that defendant's T shirt 20 sufficiently covered the upper part of 21 his trousers."

22 During the oral argument on the motion for leave 23 to appeal it was demonstrated that blood on the thin cotton 24 porous material of a T shirt would immediately penetrate 25 through and get on the trousers. When queried by the Court

1 on this point the Prosecution had no explanation then to 2 make. In the trial court the State agreed that the defend-3 ant was wearing trousers. It so agreed in its brief on the 4 motion for leave to appeal. Now more than a year after the 5 trial the State in its answer brief on the merits concludes 6 that the defendant did not have any trousers on. Just where 7 does the requirement of proof that the circumstances must 8 point unerringly to guilt and exclude every reasonable 9 hypothesis of innocence apply?

10 Let us discuss the last theory -- the no trousers 11 on -- theory now advanced by the State. The evidence 12 established that on the second floor and east of the bed-13 room of Mr. and Mrs. Sheppard was Dr. Sheppard's dressing 14 room. There was a light in this room all night. When 15 retiring it was the custom of defendant to go to this 16 dressing room, remove his clothes and attire himself in 17 night apparel and then go to the bedroom. Under the most 18 recent theory of the State it is now claimed -- or must be 19 claimed -- that the defendant went to his dressing room, 20 removed his trousers, his shorts, his socks, and his shoes, 21 because no blood was found on any of these articles except-22 ing a spot of blood on one knee of the trousers. He did not 23 remove his T shirt according to the State and thus clad with 24 an armless T shirt and nothing else on, he went in and 25

1 killed his wife. Such lack of attire would expose his bare 2 arms and his bare limbs. The thin cotton T shirt would be 3 little protection to a woman's fingernails. There was a 4 violent struggle. That is agreed by both parties. At 5 page 70 of the State's brief contra motion for leave to 6 appeal is this language referring to the victim:

7 "One fingernail from the left hand of 8 Marilyn Sheppard was practically torn off and 9 this may well have resulted from such a 10 struggle."

11 The evidence also discloses that her fingernails 12 were packed and embedded with foreign material. She 13 scratched her assailant most vigorously. She was fighting 14 for her life and it is readily understood that a woman would 15 scratch and scratch with all of the strength that she had.
16 Mrs. Sheppard was an athletic young woman, vigorous and 17 strong. Yet in all of this struggle, according to the 18 testimony of Officers Schottke and Gareau who examined the 19 defendant at the hospital on the morning of July 4th, there 20 was not a single scratch on his arms or his limbs. There 21 was no mark made by fingernails on him. He had a bruise 22 over one eye obviously administered by a heavy object and 23 another severe bruise at the top of the cervical spine.
24 There was no scratch. What is a reasonable inference? Had 25 the defendant committed this crime attired as the State now says he was, there would have been many scratches and marks

1 on his arms and limbs and probably his body.

2 There were found two pieces of leather described 3 in the evidence of different sizes that obviously came from 4 a leather jacket. These were scratched out by the victim.
5 Dr. Sheppard did not have a leatherette jacket or any other 6 leather about the house that matched these two pieces found 7 under the bed. One such piece was found on July 5th, the 8 other piece somewhat later. A proper and logical inference 9 may be drawn that if a man practically naked committed this 10 horrible crime there would have been some scratches about 11 his body, arms or legs as a result of this violent death
12 struggle.

13 Two pieces of tooth were found on the victim's 14 bed when her body was removed. Dr. Gerber, the Coroner, 15 finally determined that these pieces of tooth were 16 Marilyn's. The State's testimony establishes that the 17 teeth were not broken off by any external blow to the face, 18 otherwise the teeth would have fallen down into her throat.
19 At page 1806 of the record the State pathologist testified:

20 "Q. And the way that these teeth were broken 21 off and the wound inside the mouth
22 without any external wounds, indicated 23 that something had got into the mouth;
24 hadn't it?

25 "A. Certainly."

1 From the facts in the record a reasonable inference 2 may be drawn. The assailant was delivering repeated blows
3 about the head of the victim. She was struggling violently 4 to resist the attack. She screamed. The assailant placed 5 his hand over her mouth and a finger penetrated into the 6 mouth and between the teeth. The victim clamped down on 7 this finger and it was jerked out violently, thereby 8 precipitating the broken teeth outwards and onto the bed 9 where they were found. The assailant's finger would surely 10 have been severely lacerated and caused much blood to 11 emerge. There was not a scratch on the defendant's hands 12 or fingers. The blood on the defendant's wristwatch later 13 found in the green bag, and the blood on the victim's 14 wristwatch over the face and links, was not the blood of 15 Marilyn Sheppard according to the State's pathologist. She 16 did not find any of the O group -- which was Marilyn's -- 17 smeared over either the wristwatch of the victim or the 18 wristwatch of the defendant. It is reasonable to infer that 19 the assailant's finger having been severely lacerated, his 20 blood would have been smeared over both wristwatches. The 21 blood was not that of the defendant. That the defendant's 22 wristwatch was violently jerked off his wrist is indicated 23 by physical damage to one of the links in the bracelet of 24 the watch. A man removing his own wristwatch does not jerk 25

1 it off with such violence. The State complains that the 2 defendant does not explain this or that. It isn't the 3 obligation of the defendant to make any explanation at all.
4 It is the duty of the State to present evidence sufficient 5 to convict beyond a reasonable doubt. However, the defendant 6 offered himself time after time freely and voluntarily to 7 the most severe interrogation. He was interrogated in the 8 hospital on the morning of July 4th and for days thereafter.
9 The Coroner arranged a Roman Holiday in a gymnasium or 10 auditorium of the high school and announced that the 11 defendant would be called upon to testify. We have never 12 heard of an inquest so advertised as this. At any rate, 13 probably a thousand or more people gathered and there for 14 five hours the defendant sat on the witness stand and every 15 intimate act of his whole life was pryed into. The question-16 ing was not confined to the cause of the death of Marilyn 17 Sheppard as was the duty of the Coroner to ascertain, but 18 open to every conceivable inquiry into his whole life. He 19 submitted to that. All day and into the evening while in 20 the County Jail he submitted to interrogation by police 21 officers.

23 It should be noted that a person entering from the 24 street side of the house would pass through the kitchen to 25 the stairway leading upstairs. Such a person would not see

1 the defendant lying on a couch against the wall along the 2 stairway in the living room.

3 At page 108 of the State's brief on the merits, 4 an error of the trial court is pointed out in this language:

5 "In 39 American Jurisprudence, page 101, 6 Section 86, it is stated:

7 " * * * if it does not appear that the 8 jurors have read the newspaper, a verdict
9 will not be set aside merely because articles 10 were published during the trial which were 11 likely to influence the jury.'

12 "Annotated under this statement is the 13 case of Fields v. Dewitt, 71 Kansas 676, 81 14 P. 467, 6 Ann. Cas. 349, in which it was 15 held that where articles discussing the 16 merits of a case are shown to have been 17 published during the trial in newspapers
18 of general circulation in the community, 19 it cannot be presumed upon review, against 20 the finding of the trial court, that they 21 were read by the jury, if there is no 22 direct evidence to that effect."

23 It is of record that two members of the jury 24 listened to and heard the vicious, false broadcast of Walter 25 Winchell saying that the defendant, Sheppard, had had a mistress in New York who bore him a son who later died; that the woman was arrested for complicity in robbery. There it is established as a matter of record that the jurors or some of them, rather, did listen to vicious, false broadcasts about the merits of the case. The court later refused to ask the jury if it had listened to further vicious broadcasts comparing the defendant to Alger Hiss. The last

1 phrase of the quotation from the State's brief is "if there
2 is no direct evidence to that effect." There is direct evi-3 dence in this record that members of the jury did listen to 4 a vicious and false broadcast heaping calumny upon the 5 defendant.

6 This is a doubtful case. The three shifts of the 7 State relative to the T shirt shows that even the prosecu-
8 tion does not know what ground it will take or what premise 9 it will assume in that vital feature of the evidence. The 10 two teeth jerked out of the victim's mouth with no lacera-11 tion on the fingers of the defendant again casts doubt upon 12 the verdict. The frantic search to match the leather found 13 under the bed -- the bits of leather -- and the failure of 14 the prosecution to find any leather that would match these 15 two bits of leather cast further doubt upon the case. The 16 finding of the green bag long after an intense search had 17 been instituted and found in the position where the brush 18 had been cut down and beaten down under where the bag was 19 found would indicate that it was not tossed into the brush 20 during the night, but was placed there after the brush had 21 been beaten down and cut away. The blood on the defendant's 22 wristwatch was not the blood of the victim, nor his. Whose 23 was it? It was the blood of the assailant who jerked the 24 wristwatch off of the defendant's wrist to cover up the 25

1 crime of the real assailant. The grievous injuries of the 2 defendant which could not have been simulated nor self-3 inflicted cast further doubt upon the case. The State's 4 theory, the State's claim that certain blood was on the 5 stairway failed because blood probably was dropped there 6 during the years of the occupation of the house by the 7 Sheppards and their predecessors. At any rate, the blood 8 obviously was not fresh because there was no blood whatso-9 ever upon the shoes of the defendant. Blood does not wash 10 off.

11 In spite of the broadcast heard by certain members 12 of the jury, the violently hostile press, and the general 13 confusion attendant upon the trial by photographers, the 14 jury was out five days and also some night sessions. It 15 did not return a verdict of first degree murder, but did 16 return a verdict of second degree, which means life. There 17 was doubt throughout the whole case, it is saturated with 18 doubt. Therefore, it appears that this Court should then 19 scrutinize very carefully the many, many errors pointed out 20 in the briefs filed in this Court. There were wholesale 21 unsupervised telephone communications between members of 22 the jury and outsiders. The calls were put through by the 23 jurors. The doctrine of the Adams case, supra, is that 24 such communications being in direct violation of the 25

1 statutes of Ohio creates a presumption of prejudice toward 2 the defendant. The State made no effort whatsoever to remove 3 this presumption but on the other hand by objections which 4 were sustained thwarted the efforts of defendant's counsel
5 to find out what, if anything, the jurors may have reported 6 to the bailiff in charge relative to what may have been said 7 to them over the telephone. The George Washington phase of 8 the court's charge that because Washington happened to be 9 on the driveway with an axe on his shoulder, he probably 10 cut the cherry tree down is a deadly comparison with the 11 case that Sheppard being in the home he therefore killed 12 his wife.

13 This being an extremely doubtful case, the court's 14 charge on the general reputation for conduct of the defend-15 ant as to peace and quiet was highly prejudicial. The jury 16 was not allowed to consider that evidence in arriving at 17 a verdict of guilty or innocent. The defendant was 18 deprived of his constitutional rights. He was denied due 19 process of law. The evidence of the State and of the 20 entire record not being legally sufficient to support a 21 verdict of guilty beyond a reasonable doubt, the defendant 22 should have judgment entered for him and he should be 23 forthwith discharged.
24
25

1 If the court should not agree with that conclusion
2 then certainly there is prejudicial error requiring reversal 3 of the verdict and a new trial.

4 Respectfully submitted,
